Fake News and Alternative Facts

What is "Fake News?"
Fake News may take many different forms, but the essential element is always that it is partially or completely false. It may be urban legend, rumor, badly sourced writing, deliberate misinformation, or intended as humor or parody. As an information consumer, it is your responsibility to evaluate news sources for credibility, authority, and purpose, both for your own information needs and to prevent you from accidently sharing fake news to others.

May 2018 will mark 30 years since my mom, sister and two uncles and I left our home country of Colombia. However, we now call America our home. I still remember the day we arrived. I was almost five years old. I specifically remember the sandwiches we were given on the flight and the excitement of being on a plane. We were greeted at JFK by family members who were already residing in New York for a few years. My grandfather who had been living in America for a few years working to provide for us back in Colombia was a legal resident and completed the necessary paper work to bring us over. To this day my mother thanks my grandfather for bringing our family to America.

#ThanksForTyping: Women's Invisible Labor in Academia and Publishing

A Guide to Resources on Women's Previously Uncredited Work in Academic Scholarship

The #ThanksForTyping hashtag is the creation of Professor Bruce Holsinger, University of Virginia, whose conversations with colleagues about the uncredited work of wives of men in academia prompted him to search Google Books and uncover the frequent and previously ignored contributions of women in academic scholarship.
